UNACCOMPANIED HOMELESS YOUTH: Learning from Washington State to Maximize California's Historic Investment

Over the last 5 years, California has invested $533 million in addressing homelessness among youth, helping serve more than 11,000 youth. While this has greatly expanded the state's capacity to address youth homelessness and represents significant progress, how do we measure this progress? How close are we to functionally ending youth homelessness?

Please join us to learn from A Way Home Washington, where 10 communities in Washington State are on their way to achieving functional zero youth homelessness, and Community Solutions, the team behind the national Built for Zero initiative focused on measurably and equitably ending homelessness by reaching functional zero.
